

National Institute of Science Education and Research (NISER)

Advertisement for faculty positions in Computer Sciences

Advertisement No.: Estt.-Rct./FC/01-2015

Closing date: 31st December 2015

National Institute of Science Education and Research (NISER), funded by the Department of Atomic Energy (DAE), Government of India, has been set up to excel in teaching and research in different areas of science. NISER aims to provide an excellent academic ambience and support to faculty members to work in frontier areas of research in both theoretical and experimental fields of science. It also imparts high quality undergraduate and graduate education through a rigorous and well-planned course structure aimed at creating strong foundations in science among its students. With about 70 faculty, 120 PhD students and 350 integrated MSc students, NISER is vibrant with academic activities.

The detailed project report of NISER envisaged a School of Computer Sciences in NISER. A national level steering committee has been set up towards establishing such a school. Upon the recommendation of this committee this advertisement is being made to invite applications for faculty positions (at the level of Assistant Professor, Reader-F and Associate Professor) from candidates possessing excellent academic records and research experience in following fields.

Area of Computer Sciences: Algorithms; Complexity Theory; Machine Learning; Cryptography; Image Processing and Programming Languages.

The shortlisting of the candidates will be carried out in consultation with the national level steering committee. The steering committee would also act as a search committee and can suggest suitable candidates for the selection process. The process of shortlisting would include a presentation on the research work being carried by the candidate before the Faculty and students of NISER. During this process we will also invite outside NISER subject experts. The final selection will be done through an interview process before a duly constituted committee as per NISER bylaws that will include experts from the area of computer sciences of national repute. Initially the selected candidates will be part of the School of Mathematical Sciences and are expected to actively contribute towards establishing the school of computer sciences. This includes working together with the steering committee members for formulation of course structure and detailed academic activity of the school.
